

A recent conversation with two coworkers as the Covid restrictions began to lift.

“I could really use some chocolate right now.”

“Yeah, like a box of chocolates.”

“That sounds good.”

“I cut them in half.”

“Why?”

“Two reasons. So, they last longer, and I can see what’s in the center.”

“Yeah...it’s so disappointing when you pick one, thinking you know what it is, bite into it, only to find it is something you would have left in the box till the very end!”

“I hate when that happens.”

“Yeah...then you have the calories from the one you didn’t like, and still have to find the one you do like, which could take a couple more tries at it.”

“It’s no wonder we can’t lose weight!”

“You realize only women would have this conversation, right?”

“Definitely.”
